Adopted in 2025, the standards provide a framework for literacy in English Language Arts, with revisions to the standards focusing on the goals of improving clarity; incorporating current research on the science of reading; reflecting more meaningful IEFA integration; and providing literacy practices to identify broad practices and purposes for which students can apply their literacy skills across contexts. The standards reflect the constitutional mandate that all educators must provide instruction including the distinct and unique heritage and contemporary contributions of American Indians in a culturally responsive manner (See IEFA; MCA 20-1-501 Article X; resources; and materials).

The standards are organized beginning with the literacy practices, progressing through grades K-12, and concluding with a glossary of terms. Each literacy practice and grade-level standard includes the Montana coding in the left-hand column and the language of the standard on the right. The standards use individual grade levels in kindergarten through grade 8. This view of expectations across grade levels provides a tool for teachers to personalize the learning for their students by providing the broader context of a learning progression for students. For grades 9-12, the standards are categorized in two-year bands to allow schools and districts flexibility in high school course design.

For additional information and guidance on Montana's English Language Arts and Literacy Content Standards, guidance documents will be made available on The Office of Public Instruction's ELA website, beginning with a K-12 document and then progressing through grade-level specific documents.
