

Dr. Jody Britten

Director of Learning Technologies
Team4Tech

Jody Britten is a seasoned voice in digital learning, student engagement, and learner agency. A former special education teacher with a 1:1 classroom, Jody has supported teachers and learners in 27 states and countless countries. She served as one of the chief architects for the Future Ready Schools framework and assessment system for the Obama Administration and continually works with ISTE on the implementation and articulation of their student technology standards.

A sought-after speaker and trainer, Jody has been featured on the ISTE Learning Stage and in national news outlets including USA Today, The Journal, EdWeek, EdSurge, EdTech Magazine, and US News and World Report among others. Jody has been a guest at the White House during educational technology events and participates in local, national, and international advocacy. Her writing and work focus on learning that is accelerated by tools, which empower educators and students alike. To keep up with her work visit jodybritten.com.

