Performance Tasks

2. Students will gather evidence and present their findings in the form of a brief oral presentation.

Stage 3 Learning Plan

Learning Activities

Briefly share the following rationale as a way to introduce the topic of self-determination.

Self-determination is the current policy period for Indian America. There are many ways in which tribes and individuals are exercising their right to control their own destiny in an increasingly diverse American society. It is necessary for teachers and students to familiarize themselves with American Indians today and the contemporary and future issues they face. The study of changing demographics, identity, and the unique tribal cultures are important considerations for understanding American Indian people.

Students will be assigned small groups and given the following tasks.

Each group will be given a summary of the Self Determination Act and will be required to write up their interpretation of what this means for tribal nations today. Each group will identify five different ways tribes currently exercise self-determination. Emphasis on Montana nations is encouraged but students could identify broad issues that apply to many tribes. Also, students will identify 5 ways the federal government exercised control over tribes prior to self-determination.

Have research/reference materials available in the classroom. Check with the school librarian to obtain American Indian reference books that were sent out to all libraries by the Office of Public Instruction. A listing and description of the reference books is provided in the lesson.

Each group will be required to report out their findings to the class – allow approximately 5 – 10 minutes for each group to report their findings. After all groups have made their presentation, lead the class on a discussion regarding major themes/issues presented and summarize key aspects of self-determination. Use of cooperative learning models is encouraged to ensure all students participate in their small groups.
